Update 21: April 10, 2020

Good afternoon,

As of 8 P.M. tonight, April 10, Executive Order Executive Order 122 will go into effect. We have expressed our members' concerns to the Governor's Office regarding the ability to acquire enough supply of face coverings and/or gloves that work with your manufacturing process, and in some cases the inability to wear gloves for certain processes.

The governor's staff heard our concerns and while they are not planning to do any proactive enforcement visits regarding compliance with EO 122, they expect essential businesses to do all in their power to provide some type of face covering and gloves to employees for their safety. The governor's primary focus for this EO was retail businesses, particularly grocery stores.

Companies that have been able to acquire face coverings and/or gloves that work for your manufacturing process, but won't receive the full shipment of those items until later this month, make sure you can prove that you have placed the order. In the small chance someone reports your facility as non-compliant with the order, you can at least demonstrate in good faith to the government that you are doing all you can to achieve compliance considering the circumstance. The state understands that workers can't wear bandanas or homemade masks in manufacturing areas.

As well, we encourage you to communicate directly with your staff about your efforts to comply with EO 122 and what steps you are taking, including ordering of face coverings and gloves, etc. Sharing this information with your employees will ensure them that you are doing all you can to comply and keep them safe.

The Governor's Office wasn't aware that in some specific cases gloves cannot be used for manufacturing. The administration fully understands this, and if you can't wear gloves of any kind for your manufacturing process, just be ready to justify the decision if asked by the state. They emphasized that perhaps other protocols be implemented to ensure proper hygiene and that the area is disinfected.

Please, continue to practice all the other social distancing requirements listed in the E.O. 122. For many of our members, they have already gone above and beyond those requirements.

In the event your facility needs some assistance in putting together a COVID-19 disinfecting, cleaning or mitigation plan, below we have compiled a list of CCNJ Associate Member firms that may be able to help. Also, if you find that you need assistance in general facility maintenance during this time, don't hesitate to reach out as one of our more than 50 Associate Member firms may be able to assist.
